America's Most Talented Kid
8 p.m., NBC

A nationwide search culminates with talented kids competing in three age groups: 3-7, 8-12 and 13-15. Singers, dancers and musicians will all have a chance to impress a panel of judges and win a cash prize. Now, if you thought the judges for "Are You Hot?" or the line-up for "I'm A Celebrity" gave new meaning to "has-been," wait until you get a load of these "celebrity judges": Lance Bass, Maureen McCormick, rapper Sisqo, Jermaine Jackson, Daisy Fuentes, Vivica A. Fox, Tiffany, Lisa Ling and — whew, a real live one! — Jamie Lyn Spears. Hosted by Mario "Saved By The Bell" Lopez. This group really gives the kids something to strive for.

Ed
9 p.m., NBC

This weary dramedy is being moved to Friday nights, which can't bode well for its future. And while we have not checked in with our friends in wacky Stuckeyville in quite some time, we note that tonight there are two stellar guest stars: Chris Isaak and Steve Schirripa (Bobby from "The Sopranos").

Down Periscope
8 p.m., ABC Family

This submarine comedy comes at a time when The Day's own Bob Hamilton (we call him The Man Who Knows How Everything Works) is the only journalist "embedded" on a submarine. Bob is somewhere in the Red Sea, where the USS Providence is ready to fire its missiles in the general direction of Iraq, assuming the cribbage tournament will be over when the attack starts. We miss Bob here at Daybreak, because when we need to know how many parts per million hydrogen there is in water, we ask Bob.

Political statements likely from presenters, winners and audience

By GLENN LOVELL
Knight Ridder Newspapers

WITH THE UNITED STATES at war with Iraq, Hollywood's glitzy "Night of Nights" has, not surprisingly, taken on a somber pall.

Set for Sunday, the Academy Awards ceremony is expected to go on as scheduled, but with heightened security and far less of the standard hoopla. In its 75-year history, the Oscars were downplayed during World War II and postponed because of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination in 1968 and the attempt on President Reagan's life in 1981, but never have been canceled.

So now the question is: How will presenters and winners who have strong opinions about the war, pro or con, use their time at the mike — when they have a potential national audience of 50 million viewers?

The show's producer, Gilbert Cates, has provided some guidelines for Oscar-night behavior. Winners will be given 45 seconds before the orchestra drowns them out. Cates says he hopes the winners "focus on their work" and do not mount a soapbox, but that no one will be censored.

"I have to say something, even if it's silence," says Ed Harris, a front-runner in the supporting-actor category for his AIDS patient in "The Hours." "I've given this a lot of thought, but I don't know what I'll say. It could be more of a prayer than anything.

"We're all human beings, and I think the Academy respects the fact that creative people have feelings and opinions about things," he adds. "You'll be able to say what you want up there — for 45 seconds."

"To pretend that the war is not happening and not say something Sunday night would be a missed opportunity," argues Berkeley's Gail Dolgin, co-director of the nominated documentary "Daughter From Danang." "How can you silence people when something of this magnitude is happening?"

Director Chris Wedge, nominated in the animated-feature category for "Ice Age," is also anti-war. He, however, does not intend to voice his conscience. "If we're fortunate enough to get up there, I'm not planning on making an anti-war statement," he says from his office in upstate New York. "There are ways to say 'thank you' and be gracious. Frankly, the two ideas — war and Oscars — are so disjointed in my mind, I wouldn't know how to respond."

Oscar winner George Chakiris, who will participate in a special 75th-anniversary production number, argues that it's inappropriate to politicize the show.

"People should be able to say what they want, but I don't think the Oscars is the appropriate place," says the actor-dancer, who won the supporting-actor award in 1961 for "West Side Story." "It doesn't need to be turned into a political event. That spoils the fun of what is basically entertainment."

Though usually apolitical in tone, the Oscar show has on occasion forwarded certain agendas, most notably in 1973 when Marlon Brando sent Sacheen Littlefeather to refuse his "Godfather" Oscar and, in 1978, when Vanessa Redgrave used her win for "Julia" to call attention to the treatment of Palestinians at the hands of "a small bunch of Zionist hoodlums."

In 1999, to protest a special lifetime-achievement Oscar for Elia Kazan, who cooperated with the government during the Hollywood Blacklist era, Harris and others sat with folded arms.

Dolgin, who demonstrated against the war in Vietnam, thinks the strongest statement would be to cancel the event outright. She doubts, however, that this will happen, given the $78 million in sponsor fees at stake. Cadillac, Washington Mutual and other advertisers are said to be spending $1.3 million for each 30-second spot.

"Canceling would be a huge statement," Dolgin says. "To go forward and pretend the war is not happening is horrific."

Longtime Hollywood activist and former Screen Actors Guild president Ed Asner agrees, but knows the movie industry too well to expect cancellation.

"They would feel it unpatriotic to not have the Oscars," Asner says, his voice dripping with sarcasm. "We refuse to cancel baseball games when this country is in mourning. So why cancel the Oscars? I'm hoping it goes on for whatever brave soul gets up there and says, 'Damn this war!' "

Rumors have circulated through e-mail messages that the Academy has not invited several well-known anti-war protesters including "Adaptation" nominee Meryl Streep, Martin Sheen, Susan Sarandon and husband Tim Robbins.

The Academy strongly denies this, and Streep and Sarandon are listed on the official Oscars.org site as confirmed presenters.
